A new study from DTU suggests that knowledge about the bioluminescent system of dinoflagellates can help us create sustainable natural lighting in cities in the future.