Temperature-size responses match latitudinal-size clines in arthropods, revealing critical differences between aquatic and terrestrial species.